“How to create a reflection in Photoshop “ by Linda Phelps

To make a water reflection, you need an image with a sky.

1. Open image. Edit the image. You can even add sharpening.
2. Remove any distracting elements in the frame.
3. Crop if needed & clean up edges.
4. Crop a narrow strip of the portion of the image to use for the part you want above the reflection. Name it 'reality layer' & save.
5. Go back to the previous image. Flip vertically. Make a duplicate layer. Go to edit, click on transform, click on flip vertically.
6. Go to filters ñdistort ñglass, the following settings were made: Distortion 7, smoothness 4, texture frosted, Click OK
7. Add the ocean ripple filter. Filters ñdistort ñocean ripple these settings were used: ripple size 9, ripple magnitude 11

8. Make a new layer. Go to edit ãtransform ãclick distort. Click on the middle handle at the bottom of the image and pull up to shorten the reflection.
9. Crop off the excess blue water.
10. Go to filters -stylize ãwind
11. Go to filters ãblur ãmotion blur settings: angle 0, distance 24
There is no separate photo showing this step.
12. Go to image click on canvas size. Click in the middle bottom box.
The box will turn white. Change the height amount to add enough space above the image to paste the reality layer on top of the blurred image that was just created.
13. Merge down layers.
14. Select the blue water with the magic wand.
15. Go to filters -texture ãtextureize settings: Texture sandstone, scaling maximum amount 197, relief 10, & light from the top.
16. Add one more filter. Filters ãblur ãmotion blur using the same settings as in the colored reflection above.

This finishes the effect.
